Report: Half of New York roads need repair

Half of New York's roads and about 40% of the state's bridges need urgent repair work, according to a new report. A quarter of the state's bridges don't meet basic highway standards, and 12% have serious structural problems, researchers found. Costs associated with congestion and lack of basic safety features costs the state's drivers an average of $1,888 each year, the report claims.

Crain's New York Business (1/14)